TEST	PATIENT'S VALUES	UNITS	REFERENCE RANGE
D-DIMER Citrate Plasma, Method: CLIA	317.91	ng/ml	0.0 - 500

Interpretation

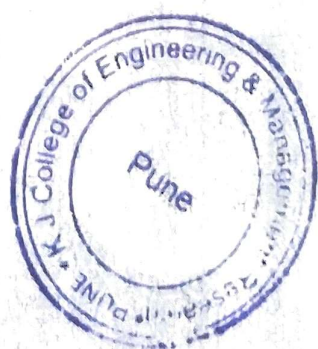

A normal D-dimer result or less has a negative predictive value of approximately 100% (range 97%-100%) and is FDA approved for the exclusion of acute pulmonary embolism (PE) and deep vein thrombosis (DVT) when there is low or moderate pretest probability for PE or DVT. D-dimer concentrations increase with age and, thus the specificity for DVT and PE exclusion decreases with age. For DVT or PE exclusion, in addition to clinical pretest probability, age adjusted D-dimer cutoffs are suggested for patients older than 50 yrs. Of age. Recent suggests using clinical pretest probability and age adjusted cutoffs to improve the performance of D-dimer testing in patients older than 50yrs. Of age. Increased D-dimer values are abnormal but do not indicate a specific disease state. D-dimer values may be increased as a result of:

- Clinical or subclinical disseminated intravascular coagulation/intravascular coagulation and fibrinolysis
- Other conditions associated with increased activation of the procoagulant and fibrinolytic mechanisms such as recent surgery, active or recent bleeding, hematomas, trauma or thromboembolism
- Association with pregnancy, liver disease, inflammation, malignancy, or hypercoagulable (Procoagulant) states.

the degree of D-dimer increas does not definitely correlate with the clinical severity of associated disease states.
